a language of freedom and teacher's authority case comparisons from turkey and the united states explores dimensions of authority that are deeply embedded in the profession of teaching it examines critical dimensions of the foundations of Turkish and U.S. public education both of which are under new pressures due to changes in the relationship between public schooling and current reforms in education. The contributors reflect on varied dimensions of authority of which ideals are shifting under political and economic pressures in both Turkey and the U.S. Public education reflects the early influence of secular equalitarianism, revolutionary democratic developments, and an enlightenment-based sense of the human right to education. Against this, we see the opposing dialectic where state control and curricular censorship and constriction appear too often.

The contributions of community colleges to society are well documented, yet today's community colleges are at a crossroad. Decreases in funding support, a push for college completion, attention on developmental course work, and a host of other demands create a dynamic context for community college operations. Who leads these colleges matters as they face these demands, and how they lead influences outcomes. Pending leadership retirements provide a prime opportunity for thinking about community college leadership in new ways. Entering this environment are prospective and aspiring leaders who are often not adequately prepared for the complexities of managing in a paradoxical organization. The era of accountability puts a fine point on the need for leaders to pay heed to the policy-making process and to requirements dictated by state legislative bodies and accreditation bodies. Foundations and grant funders serve as instigators for changes in community colleges as well and also support research into ways to link employer needs to college curricular changes. This book argues that neo leaders are required to lead transformational change for today and tomorrow's community colleges. No longer can we rely on single leaders atop a hierarchy; talent throughout the institution must be tapped. The authors argue that networked leadership is needed for networked leadership. We begin to advance thinking about the role of networks and connections among leaders throughout the college and beyond the college's walls. This volume outlines underlying values critical for neo leaders and offers questions leaders at various levels can use to jumpstart the type of courageous conversations needed on campus. The tools presented in this book provide current and aspiring leaders with resources to prepare for successfully leading the way and developing new leaders to shape the future. Our community colleges and their students require nothing less.
